AMERICA'S EMPLOYERS FACE THE HIGHEST TAX RATE OF ANY MAJOR COUNTRY IN THE WORLD.

It's not a red or blue issue. It's a red, white and blue issue.

It's a fact: America's largest employers face tough global competition every day. It's also a fact that America's employers face the highest statutory tax rate of any major country in the world.

Because of this unfair disadvantage, businesses must do everything they can to stay competitive and keep their employees working—and use every tax benefit available to level the global playing field.

But instead of updating our outdated tax code, Washington politicians are trying to go back and impose taxes on American employers that weren't owed in the first place. This retroactive tax will hurt employers and their workers and will cost U.S. jobs.

America needs comprehensive tax reform today—to protect American employers and American jobs. Find out what you can do to help at FairTaxNow.com.
What if the government took back your legal tax deductions from last year?

It’s unbelievable and unfair.

The federal government has a surprise in store for American employers and their workers. Washington politicians want to tax America’s largest employers retroactively, selectively punishing American businesses.

It may sound hard to believe, but look at the facts. The Obama Administration has record setting the White House supports actions that would enact retroactive taxation.

America’s employers face the highest statutory tax rate of any major country in the world. One way they can level the playing field against these economic disadvantages is by utilizing all existing tax benefits and deductions. It’s the only way to compete with tough foreign competition. Any attempt to turn back time and impose taxes that weren’t owed in the first place will hurt U.S. businesses and cost U.S. jobs.

“Obama Administration Presses for Retroactive Legislation on Tax Inversions”

New York Times | July 2014

Democrats and Republicans agree: No President should be able to go back in time and impose taxes on American employers and their workers that weren’t owed in the first place.

It may sound hard to believe, but today there is a movement to retroactively rewrite U.S. corporate tax laws and selectively punish some American businesses. In fact, the White House is on record as saying they support actions that would enact retroactive taxation.

There is no question that our tax code is antiquated. It hasn’t been substantially revised since 1986. And there continues to be bipartisan support for updating these nearly 30-year-old policies.

Yet the only taxes that businesses can fail are the ones we currently have. And according to those laws, one way American businesses can better compete with foreign companies is through the practice of inversion, where companies create a new global headquarters for global operations, while still maintaining U.S. headquarters and operations here at home. Finishing companies that have already pursued legal inversions will hurt U.S. businesses and cost jobs.
